Welcome

The Program on Law and Sustainability at Arizona State University's Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law is delighted to welcome you to the Fourth Annual Sustainability Conference of American Legal Educators.

This ambitious conference is our signature contribution to the worldwide sustainability movement—a movement whose influence continues to expand throughout legal academia. As we're all aware, technological advancements over the past century have dramatically improved daily life for countless people across the world. Unfortunately, many of these modern conveniences also deplete or alter the planet's natural resources in ways that could significantly harm future generations. Transitioning cities, nations, and the world toward more environmentally sustainable living has thus emerged as one of humankind's greatest twenty-first century challenges.

Billions of dollars are invested annually into scientific and engineering research aimed at improving the environmental sustainability of modern economies. In contrast, far fewer resources are devoted to the development of creative policy strategies and legal structures tailored to support the valuable sustainability innovations emerging from this global research effort. This conference seeks to help address that imbalance by annually bringing together many of the nation's foremost legal scholars researching in sustainability-related areas. By providing a forum for legal academics to develop new collaborations and share ideas face-to-face, the conference aims to engender greater scholarly discourse on these imperative issues and to ultimately move the needle in humankind's relentless pursuit of a more ecologically sustainable society.

Zombie Energy Laws

Johusa Macey

73 Vanderbilt L. REV. 1077 (2020)

Abstract:

This Article traces the development of three legal rules—cost recovery for vertically integrated utilities, the requirement that regulators assess the financial viability of energy projects before issuing a certificate of public convenience and necessity, and the filed rate doctrine—that emerged out of the view that electric power companies should be shielded from market forces. It argues that important elements of these legal rules have become “zombie energy laws.” Zombie energy laws are statutes, regulations, and judicial precedents that continue to apply after their underlying economic and legal bases dissipate. Zombie energy laws were originally designed to protect consumers by, among other things, preventing utilities from exploiting their market power. Today, however, they protect incumbent fossil fuel generators and have provided the legal basis for invalidating billions of dollars of wind and solar projects. Thus, energy laws that emerged to mitigate market power abuses under the old system of utility rate regulation now entrench incumbent market power and are impeding the transition to a cleaner energy system. In this way, zombie energy laws are protecting incumbent energy companies from traditional tort, contract, and antitrust laws that prevent firms operating in ordinary industries from acting anticompetitively.

This Article concludes by arguing that the Federal Power Act, which instructs the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to maintain “just and reasonable” wholesale rates, can plausibly be read to mitigate—and, in some cases, eliminate—the market distortions caused by zombie energy laws. The Act’s meaning should be construed to fit the market structure to which it is being applied.

What is the Morrison Prize Contest?

The Morrison Prize is a $10,000 cash prize awarded to the author(s) of the most impactful sustainability-related legal academic paper published in North America during the previous year. The Morrison Prize Contest bears the name of its funder, Richard N. Morrison, who is also the co-founder of Arizona State University’s Morrison Institute for Public Policy.
