

Molly Land is Associate Professor of Law at New York Law School. Drawing on her human rights expertise and background as a litigator in the areas of intellectual property and technology, Professor Land's scholarship focuses on access to knowledge and the intersection of intellectual property, information law, and human rights.

Land's current work explores the extent to which human rights law can provide a foundation for claims of access to the Internet as well as the opportunities and challenges for using new technologies to achieve human rights objectives. Professor Land's articles have been published in the Yale, Harvard, and Michigan journals of international law, among other places. She will be joining the University of Connecticut School of Law and Human Rights Institute in the fall.

Prior to joining New York Law School, Professor Land was a Visiting Lecturer in Law and the Robert M. Cover / Allard K. Lowenstein Fellow in International Human Rights at Yale Law School. Professor Land is a graduate of Yale Law School and clerked for the Honorable Denise Cote, U.S. District Judge for the Southern District of New York. After her clerkship, she was named a Robert L. Bernstein Fellow in International Human Rights and worked as a human rights researcher for Minnesota Advocates for Human Rights. Between 2003 and 2005, she litigated copyright, trademark, cybersquatting, and patent cases with Faegre & Benson LLP.
