

Amanda Clayton is a PhD student in economics at North Carolina State University. She is also a PhD fellow in the NSF IGERT funded Genetic Engineering and Society Program at NC State. Her primary research interests include microeconomic development, global health, labor, feminist economics, interdisciplinary collaboration, and the policy and regulation of genetic engineering technologies.